Listen to the Spanish and write the number of the sentence you hear :

1. _____
2. _____
3. _____
4. _____
5. _____

Listen to the English and write
the number of the sentence you hear:

1. _____
2. _____
3. _____
4. _____
5. _____

Teachers: One extra sentence is given above on purpose so that answers don't come from simply process of elimination. If students are literate and the new language has the same alphabet as the native language, there is direct transfer of most vocabulary from auditory fluency to reading skills. The use of the absurd illustrates how the mind is capable of remixing old vocabulary to understand sentences with completely new meanings (a sign of fluency), even though the meanings are absurd. You'll notice in the demo that people's bodies will begin to do the absurd narration correctly, but their rational minds will make them hesitate; they don't believe what they've heard. The use of games provides the safe trial and error context so necessary to grow dendrites, increasing the velocity at which the ear is capable of understanding the new language (another sign of fluency). Inserting things like plurals, adjectives, and cognates can serve as contextual clues to prime or pre-teach new grammar, providing a familiar aid for the future when new information needs a reference point to which it can run back and attach itself. Inserting famous people and students from the class is fun, helps grab attention, and makes this small assessment a pleasant learning experience. Short, daily assessments give the brain the quick feedback it wants and an opportunity for pop-up grammar lessons in context. This satisfies left hemisphere curiosity as is unconsciously compares L1 with L2 and confirms correctness (another sign of fluency) or need to change/adapt, a basic survival skill of the brain.
